

Upper School Curriculum Statement 2016-17

The aim of the Upper School is to deliver the broad Waldorf Curriculum and to prepare pupils for GCSE examinations.

Within the Curriculum pupils are encouraged to develop a range of skills that equip the individual to be creative and adaptable in fields beyond that which they have specifically learned. With this in mind the broad variety of interlinked, cross-curricular subjects taught through Main Lesson, Modules and Subject Lessons lends itself to preparing the adolescent to discover his/her own individuality, judgement and discernment and develop a moral and ethical will based on insight. It also enables us to send out pupils into life who can fulfil their own potential and who can use creative, imaginative and constructive skills to undertake whatever tasks in life come their way.

The Upper School Curriculum aims to combine schooling the intellect with caring for imaginative qualities and character building. Therefore artistic and practical activities are seen as being of equal value to the provision of knowledge and each field of experience should be integrated into the whole. The Curriculum is not merely a syllabus to be ticked off item by item, but is a Curriculum which allows age-appropriate development at each specific stage.

The pupils will be encouraged to become familiar with the world and the challenges it sets them and to set about developing powers of independent judgement, intellect and a striving towards truth.

Lessons in the Upper School are taught by specialist subject teachers and each pupil will experience a Module, Main Lesson and a variety of Subject Lessons every day. Alongside the Waldorf Curriculum comes GCSE preparation. At Elmfield, examinations are taken over two years so that the Waldorf Curriculum is not overly compromised. All Upper School pupils also follow lessons in Religion, and Class 9 has IT lessons at a local 6th form college. Some students have additional Maths and English support lessons, called Core Skills.

We hope that a Waldorf education prepares the young person to enter adulthood:

With a reverence for the World's beauty and challenges;
With the ability to make independent judgements;
With analytical and critical faculties
And the self-discipline to demand the best of themselves.
